About Dean S. Thomas:

Dean S. Thomas, today's foremost authority on Civil War small arms ammunition first visited Gettysburg in 1960. Interest in the Civil War and the collecting of Civil War artifacts began with the start of the Centennial celebration in 1961, when he visited Gettysburg again – and found his first bullet.

A graduate of Haddon Township High School, Westmont, NJ, in 1966, he attended Gettysburg College, then graduated from Glassboro State College in Glassboro, NJ, in 1972 with a B.A. in history. During this time he spent five summer seasons as a Licensed Battlefield Guide at the Gettysburg National Military Park. He founded Thomas Publication in 1981 with the authorship of Ready...Aim...Fire!, followed not long after by Cannons and Civil War Commanders.

Round Ball to Rimfire is the result of a lifelong interest in, and study of, Civil War small arms ammunition, and has grown to a multi-volume set. Part One (1997) covers Federal rifle musket and smoothbore ammunition, as well as detailed information on the U.S. Ordnance Department, Northern arsenals, patents, designers, and manufacturers. Part Two (2002) fully covers Federal breechloading carbine and rifle ammunition, while Part Three (2003) is where you will find all you need to know about Federal pistol and revolver ammunition. Part Four (2010) relates the Confederate history of small arms ammunition while Confederate Arsenals, Laboratories, and Ordnance Depots (3 Volume set) immediately followed

($800-$1200)	649.	Josiah Gorgas signed letter to Lt. Col. J.M. Kennard, Ord. officer at Meridian, MS. April 23, 186(4)
	650.	Revolutionary War Soldier's Log Hut from Southboro, Mass. Research indicates that this is the only survivor from the thousands constructed during the time of our independence. Termed the “First Model” – it was built without pegs in order to be easily transportable. This museum quality artifact is truly unique and was acquired from collector and author Frank Kravick. This log hut has squared and dovetailed timbers with no pins to facilitate moving by dismantling and putting on a wagon. The hut is built of “hard pine” (related to Southern Yellow Pine), now extinct in New England. Hard pine originally grew along the coast and particularly on Cape Cod. Used largely in furniture making, this wood was essentially destroyed by agricultural methods. Southboro, Massachusetts served as a rear staging area for troops coming to the north, to be assigned to the American line at the siege of Boston, April 1775 - May 1776. It also served as a quartermaster depot for goods and provisions for the army at Boston. Commissary Samuel McClellan operated from there. This hut is the only one to survive of five or six still in existence earlier in the 20th century. When discovered in 1974, it was sheathed in weathered red stained pine boards with a shingle roof, and had served as a tinsmith shop in the 19th century. Both adze and hewing axe marks are prevalent on the timbers, and remnants of whitewash are evident on the interior.

- ($800-$1200) 650A. Revolutionary War era soldiers' traveling cot acquired from an old Connecticut estate. (Superb condition)
651. Revolutionary War British 4-pounder Cannon barrel mounted on cast iron carriage. The tube was recovered ca. 1975 in 25 feet of water in the Richelieu River at Fort St. Jean (John) Canada. During Richard Montgomery's failed attempt to conquer the "14th colony" of Canada in 1775, he first gathered artillery from Crown Point and Fort Ticonderoga, which included nine 4-pounders from the latter. Proceeding to Fort St. John, he laid siege from Sept. 6 to Nov. 2 when Sir Guy Carleton surrendered. A wonderful relic of this campaign!

NOTE The use of the term "rare" is synonymous with the word "Confederate," especially as it pertains to small arms ammunition. Therefore, let's just say that this collection is "unprecedented." Many of these cartridges and wrappers are the only specimens known.
